Timber Flooring Facts and Variation

Riverhill Timber Flooring are made from natural materials and differ in color, texture and naturally occurring features within and between individual pieces and batches of the same species. Sample, reproductions in printing and photography are only for guidance; they provide a color indication but are not necessarily representative of the overall effect or design.

Please be cautious when making your selection from a single sample, reproductions in printing and photography, as these are only an indication.

Timber flooring products will vary from board to board, job to job, and from the samples on display in all jobs supplied. The color of your flooring may change overtime because of UV light and oxygen exposure.

Minor splits and wood checks/cracks are naturally occurrences in timber.

Timber flooring products continue to absorb and release moisture, expand, and contract over their lifetime depending on local conditions, environmental conditions, and weather changes. Even with proper installation, slight expansion, and contraction, as well as board separation, is normal; however, excessive movement due to extreme weather conditions is to be expected. It is critical to be aware of and to check conditions to ensure that your floor performs within tolerances. Installing your timber floor according to Riverhill installation guideline is crucial for a high-performing floor. Before beginning any installation, please read Riverhill installation guides.
